Dear Mr Johnson,

I believe that to tackle the climate crises old buildings in the UK must be insulated, and the gas boilers we rely on should be converted to renewable energy sources. As too much heat is escaping through old houses single glazed windows, thin walls and leaky roofs as well as the problem of gas boilers polluting the environment.

Also, solar panels should be promoted since they are a clean energy and can be used by everyone in the UK.

As important short-distanced flights should be banned, as they are bad for the environment and a train ride to the same place would take just as long.

I trust that I shall see these suggestions implemented with the utmost urgency!

Yours sincerely,

Maximilian M
